

Honors Medical Scholars Program at the Florida State University College of Medicine

Our goal is to develop resilient and adaptable scholars reflecting the same values and mission as College of Medicine graduates: practice patient-centered health care, discover and advance knowledge, and respond to community needs, especially through service to elder, rural, minority, and underserved populations.

The Honors Medical Scholars Program recruits students interested in medicine who demonstrate a high level of academic ability, a heart for service, and a sincere concern for vulnerable populations through volunteering.

As undergraduate students, Honors Medical Scholars benefit from:

- Specialized advising
- A unique seminar course
- A faculty mentorship program
- Group prerequisite course registration
- Medical and community volunteer activities
- The Honors Medical Scholars Society
- Early-decision eligibility to the FSU College of Medicine

Admission to the Honors Medical Scholars Program

The strongest applicants to the Honors Medical Scholars Program will have a record of high academic ability, a heart for service, and a sincere concern for vulnerable populations. Exposure and experience in health care and health-related settings is recommended.

Application Tips

- Get involved in service activities with an emphasis in underserved communities.
- Excel in the most rigorous math and science courses offered at your school.
- Study for the SAT and/or ACT
- Shadow a doctor or two to gain an understanding of the medical profession.
- Join a club that you enjoy!

The Honors Medical Scholars Program is not a Bachelor of Science/Doctor of Medicine program. While not guaranteed admission into the College of Medicine, FSU Honors Medical Scholars who complete the program and premedical requirements will be eligible to apply to the FSU College of Medicine through the early decision process.
